

AFTER PM'S WORLD WAR THREE THREAT

THE Sun SAYS

Terror morons

THE police's apology over the "Allahu Akbar" cry before a mock terror attack is a gutless surrender to political correctness.

Cops have been cowed by dim, dangerous idiots unable to admit the simple reality that Britain's main security threat is from Islamist murderers.

The staged assault was meant to be by "a Daesh-style organisation", another term for IS. Rightly so. Who else but IS and al-Qaeda pose us such a threat?

In whose name but Allah's do they kill?

And what are they indoctrinated to shout before slaughtering innocent people, as one did in Munich yesterday?

"Allahu Akbar" is a harmless phrase among ordinary Muslims. It's also the final shout of every IS psychopath.

One peacenik whined that "we need to move away from stereotypes". The cops should have laughed in her face. Instead they said sorry for "linking the exercise with Islam". How pathetic. Of course they were linked. Why wouldn't they be?

Yesterday Trevor Phillips, ex-head of the Equality and Human Rights Commission, bravely attacked those too right-on to face up to the repugnant fascism of a minority of Muslims in the UK.

The hang-wringing clowns who attacked police for linking an IS-style massacre with Islam are part of the same problem.

Extremely daft

FEW tactics are more likely to turn undecided referendum voters towards Leave than for a Remain politician to insult them as "extremists" for considering it.

Labour's Alan Johnson let slip the smug contempt for Leave voters held by so many metropolitan lefties.

If they ever left their bubble they might grasp the widespread antipathy to Brussels among many moderate, intelligent people on both left and right.

And it is especially idiotic to call THEM extreme . . . while hysterically predicting World War Three if Britain exits the EU.

Aid for crooks

DAVID Cameron is right to brand Nigeria and Afghanistan "fantastically corrupt".

But why is Britain still giving these crooks hundreds of millions in "aid"?

Nigeria is meant to spend it tackling terror. It doesn't. Afghanistan is a cesspit of institutional criminality.

If the PM knows how casually they embezzle British taxpayers' money, it is obscene that he doesn't just pull the plug.

Sack saboteurs

THE saboteurs trying to scupper the new school SATs must be identified and fired.

Doubtless they will be martyrs to those, like the unions, who oppose any Tory measures to improve education.

But tougher SATs are a key step in raising standards. We should welcome them.

THE moment for the British people to define their character for the 21st Century came when our Prime Minister David Cameron invoked the threat of World War Three.

He was at the British Museum, surrounded by an assembly of ambassadors arriving in their limousines.

Could anything have been more ridiculous?

The claim was erroneous. The history false. The venue ludicrous. The virtual absence of British voters farcical.

Churchill's famous V sign was usually done with the palm facing outwards to a real enemy. I expect the British people to turn the palm inwards in derision and make a crude V sign to this speech.

When leader of the opposition Cameron used to claim he was the "heir to Blair". A comparison truer by the day.

Both treat us with contempt. Blair took us into a war, incompetently handled the aftermath and was removed by his MPs. Cameron threatens us with a war, incompetently handles the referendum and is resented by his MPs.

The prime reason why we were on the winning side in the First and Second World Wars was that we were a proper self-governing country with a Parliament that made its own laws, traded worldwide and when faced by a military invasion of our friend and ally could decide for ourselves how to respond.

We had not embraced "isolationism" as Cameron claims then. Nor had we turned "our back on Europe".

Long-past battles

As members of Nato and a permanent member of the UN Security Council, we will not become isolationists nor cease to be Europeans in 2016 if you vote for the UK to leave the EU on June 23.

We fought in 1914 and in 1939 from the outset with other European countries. We had allies in the Dominions who came in early with troops.

Also in America whose forces came across the Atlantic from 1917 and again before D-day in 1944. They were all crucial to our success and the US, with the Canadians, were the forerunners of Nato in 1949.

Last week I spoke in Toronto and Ottawa stressing how within Nato I hoped we could together with France create the hard rapid-reaction peacekeeping force at the disposal of the UN that Canada has championed for decades.

With the French aircraft carrier and two British aircraft carriers being built we can always have one capable of instant deployment worldwide with crack troops trained together in Nato.

That is the modern 21st Century world we can build.

There is no need, like Cameron, to look back at long-past battles: Marlborough's at Blenheim, Nelson's at Trafalgar or Wellington's at Waterloo.

Let alone say that Churchill would not have voted for Brexit.

Eminent historian Andrew Roberts has torpedoed this talk of what Churchill might have done by recalling a visit to Churchill in hospital by Field Marshal Lord Montgomery in 1962.

Monty "found the old man still smoking a cigar and with a whisky in hand 'protesting against Britain's entry into the Common Market'."

Roberts believes he would have been pro Britain leaving the EU.

I do not profess to know, but gut instinct tells me that what he said as Prime Minister nearing retirement in May 1953 is highly relevant today: "We are not members of the European Defence Community, nor do we intend to be merged in a federal European System."

What more can Cameron throw at us? What will be the next unsubstantiated claim he will pull out of the hat to try to scare the British public?

If he truly believes in the serious claims he is making, then he must be judged not just as reckless but irresponsible in calling for the referendum in 2013 in the first place.

Only a few months ago he was claiming he was willing to walk away from the re-negotiations and be ready to recommend the UK should vote to leave the EU. What new facts have emerged since?

Were the heads of our Security Services asked for a written independent assessment? Were the Ministry of Defence asked for an assessment? We are entitled to know.

The German government has just delayed a defence publication about a military headquarters for an EU defence force which it was thought would arouse controversy in the UK over further steps towards a European Army.

'Scratch my back'

That is no figment of the imagination, except for it relying on double-counting Nato force numbers.

We have had strong criticism from the US about EU defence which is seen by America as damaging to Nato.

Yet still President Obama came over during our referendum campaign, but rather than the support for Remain going up it had the opposite effect.

Now we have more politicians lined up to tell us why we should stay in the EU. These names are collected by No10 worldwide on behalf of the PM. Protocol ensures most of the "great and the good" toe the line and endorse his request. Why? Because there is a trade union of Heads of Government! You scratch my back I'll scratch yours.

The Five Presidents Report, authored by the heads of the EC, European Parliament and other such bodies, is another set of proposals delayed until our referendum is over.

We know it will urge Europe-wide elections of at least the President of the Commission and probably the President of the European Council, the job Tony Blair wanted and strangely lobbied Hillary Clinton for her help in getting.

Meanwhile reform and restructuring of the Eurozone is only cosmetic.

After our referendum, however, pressure will mount for us to eventually become part of a United States of Europe, giving up what little independence we still retain. For that is where the EU is heading.

Do not vote remain in the belief you are voting for no change and the UK can continue on as we have done for the last 16 years on the fringes of the Eurozone.

There are massive changes in the pipeline in Brussels awaiting the aftermath of our vote and if we vote to remain they will claim that as your endorsement.

Vote leave on June 23.
